

20-Year-Old Jacob J. Watson-Howland Triumphs in British Wildlife Photography Awards, Beating 13,000 Entries

With over 13,000 entries submitted, Fine Art Photographer Jacob J. Watson-Howland has won the Botanical Britain category in the British Wildlife Photography Awards (BWPA) 2025 with his striking image Streetlit Snowdrop. This achievement places him in the top 0.1% of photographers who entered the prestigious competition.

The minimalist photograph captures a single snowdrop illuminated by a city streetlight, highlighting its resilience and adaptability to Britain's changing climate. Jacob used a Canon EOS R6 and a Sigma 150-600mm lens to achieve his vision. Reflecting on the image, he said: "This botanical wonder is one of Britain's earliest blooms, signalling the changing seasons. Its modest elegance inspired me to capture its beauty against an urban backdrop."

Upon receiving the award, Jacob shared: "I'm delighted my snowdrop image reached this far in such a prestigious competition. Flowers aren't usually my subject of choice, so for it to be named the best botanical photo of 2025 in Britain is beyond exciting!"

Jacob revealed that his submission almost didn't make it due to a rule violation in post-processing. "I received an email from Will Nicholls, the competition director, informing me that one editing tool I used wasn't allowed. Thankfully, I was given a chance to re-edit and resubmit just minutes before the deadline."

Will Nicholls praised Jacob's work, stating: "With more than 13,000 images submitted to the competition, this is a truly fantastic achievement."

Jacob's award-winning photograph will be exhibited across three UK locations in 2025:

- Nunnington Hall (Yorkshire): May 17 – July 13
- Nature in Art (Gloucestershire): July 22 – September 7
- Bishop Auckland Town Hall (County Durham): September 12 – November 30

Notes to Editors:

Contact: jacobjwatsonhowland@gmail.com | www.jacobwatsonhowland.com | Instagram: @jacobwatsonhowland

About Jacob J. Watson-Howland

Jacob J. Watson-Howland (20) is an award-winning UK-based fine art photographer whose work has blended environmental storytelling with minimalist aesthetics for over half a decade. His projects include wildlife portraits, landscapes, and studies like Aliens, which explores invasive plant species in Cornwall. Recognised as one of Bradt Guides' "9 Best Young Photographers" at age 16, Jacob's work has been featured by RSPB and Digital Photographer's Magazine.

About BWPA 2025

The British Wildlife Photography Awards celebrate the beauty of British wildlife with over 13,000 entries across 11 categories. Winning images are showcased in exhibitions nationwide and published in Collection 13. More info: www.bwpawards.org

High-res image attached below: